PENTAGON SEEKS $582.7B

2 Defense Secretary Ash Carter said the Pentagon would seek a $582.7 billion defense budget next year and reshape its spending priorities to reflect a new strategic environment marked by Russian assertiveness and the rise of Islamic State. Carter, speaking to the Economic Club of Washington, said the Pentagon's funding request would be in line with last year's congressional budget deal but spending would be refocused to address five big challenges facing the U.S. military: Russia, China, North Korea, Iran and Islamic State. 4 Police are following leads in a hit-and-run collision in South Philadelphia on Monday that left a mother and her two children injured. The suspect was described as a woman driving a red Honda Accord with a broken mirror on its passenger side, Philly.com reported. The three victims' injuries weren't considered life threatening, and CBS reported Tuesday that the 30-year-old mother injured in the crash was awake, but disoriented. SPENCER BUELL

METHANE LITIGATION

5 California's attorney general sued Southern California Gas Co. on Tuesday over a huge methane leak near Los Angeles, escalating legal action sparked by an underground pipeline rupture that has forced thousands of residents from their homes since October. UNDERWEAR MAN KILLED

6 Two vehicles struck and killed an unidentified man Monday night as he ran in his underwear, waving his arms and singing near the corner of Roosevelt Boulevard and Harbison Avenue. A Chevy Tahoe initially struck the man, catapulting him into the inner lanes of the boulevard before he was struck again by a Volkswagen and possibly by two other vehicles as well, NBC reported. The unidentified man was taken to Aria Health-Torresdale Campus, where he was pronounced dead, police said in a related Philly.com article. JASON NUCKOLLS

Cops bust known drug dens in Port Richmond

Police arrested several suspects in narcotics raids last week at homes near the crime-ridden border of Kensington and Port Richmond.

SAM NEWHOUSE

After escalating violence and multiple complaints, narcotics officers swooped in last Friday on unsuspecting drug dealers, police said.

The Narcotics Unit began an investigation around the 2300 block of East Clearfield Street "based on several complaints from members in the community of drug sales, and recent shootings in the confines of the 24th District," police confirmed Tuesday.

Five suspects were arrested and charged with drug dealing. The raids were lauded by elected officials and neighbors on social media, where complaints about drug crimes are frequent.

"Best day of my life," one neighbor who saw the raid posted on Facebook. State Rep. John Taylor called it "a major drug raid."

"This sends a clear message to the drug dealers that their behavior will not be tolerated," Taylor wrote on Facebook. "I want to personally thank the 24th Police District and the Narcotics Strike Force."

The five suspects arrested were Rahsheed Karreem Thorpe, 43, of the 2300 block of East Clearfield Street; Margaret DeMilto, 60, of the 3100 block of Memphis Street, Lamont Anthony Carrol, 32, of the 5200 block of Hawthorne Street, Jerry Galindez, 51, who is listed as homeless, and Steven Lyons, 34, of the 3100 block of Agate Street.

All are charged with possession with intent to deliver and possession, police said.

Chaka Fattah Jr. leaves federal court after being convicted on bank fraud and tax charges. SAM NEWHOUSE, METRO

Five years for Fattah Jr.

Chaka Fattah Jr., who is a lawyer and did not graduate from college, represented himself at his trial.

JASON NUCKOLLS

Chaka "Chip" Fattah Jr. was sentenced to five years in prison yesterday for his conviction on 22 federal counts of bank and tax fraud.

Fattah Jr., the son of U.S. Congressman Chaka Fattah, told NBC that he planned to appeal his conviction last fall, also stating earlier that he did not foresee himself going to prison.

"I'm not going to face any time in prison," Fattah Jr. told NBC.

That prediction has turned out to be untrue.

Fattah, who is not a lawyer and did not graduate from college, represented himself at his trial, Philly.com reported in a related article. Prosecutors showed evidence that Fattah had taken more than $1 million from banks, clients and taxpayers, much of which was spent on personal expenses.

"Fattah engaged in persistent bank frauds, cheating on taxes, and thefts from the citizen-supported school district. He abused the trust that others placed in him and lied at every turn to further his frauds and conceal them," Assistant U.S. Attorney Paul Gray and Eric Gibson, a trial attorney with the U.S. Department of Justice, said in a sentencing memorandum filed last week, Philly.com added.

Fattah Jr. told NBC that he planned to appeal the verdict and that the federal prosecutors' evidence was "prejudicial."

School locked down over cop's missing gun

A Philadelphia high school was put on lockdown yesterday after a school police officer lost his loaded gun, which was taken from his car after he forgot to lock the doors.

The lockdown at Kensington Urban Education Academy at 2051 E. Cumberland St. was lifted by the afternoon after students and faculty were patted down and the school was searched.

The gun was reported missing from the officer's car, though he was unsure if it went missing before or after he drove the car to the school, ABC reported.

There was no word yesterday on whether the gun had been located.

The school serves grades nine through 12.

Underwear-clad man, waving and singing, killed on Roosevelt Blvd

Two vehicles struck and killed an unidentified man Monday night as he ran, waving his arms in the air and singing, near the corner of Roosevelt Boulevard and Harbison Avenue.

"He was running south on the Boulevard waving his hands in the air and he was singing loudly," Philadelphia Police Chief Inspector Scott Small told NBC. "He was only wearing underwear, which is very bizarre for the winter — or anytime."

The unidentified man was taken to Aria Health-Torresdale Campus, where he was pronounced dead, police told Philly.com.

Investigators told NBC that the man had mental health problems and could have been under the influence of drugs or alcohol.

NYPD cop ran prostitution ring: Investigators

A former NYPD officer is being accused of leading an interstate prostitution ring, investigators said yesterday.

Eduardo Cornejo, an 11-year veteran of the force who previously had been assigned to the 79th Precinct in Brooklyn, transported at least 10 women to motels around New York, Long Island and New Jersey, prosecutors allege.

Many of his alleged deeds happened "directly after leaving his work with the NYPD," according to the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Eastern District of New York.

The complaint follows an investigation into Cornejo's activities involving the NYPD and FBI that included a wiretap, officials said.

He could face up to 10 years in prison if convicted.

Castor throws wrench into Cosby case

The hearing will continue Wednesday as court investigates whether old DA's deal makes Cosby immune to sex assault charges.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

The sexual assault charges against Bill Cosby are up in the air after a former prosecutor took the stand for a day of testimony to claim he decided Cosby could "never" be charged for the 2004 assault.

Bruce Castor, the former DA of Montgomery County in suburban Philadelphia, testified he made that decision so that the young woman who accused Cosby of sexual assault could compel Cosby to testify in a civil lawsuit.

But apparently, almost no one but Castor knew or understood that this agreement existed.

Bill Cosby leaves Courtroom A at the Montgomery County Courthouse in Norristown. POOL

"To be clear, Mr. McMonagle, I'm not on your team — I want them to win," Castor said with an enigmatic smile to Cosby's defense lawyer Brian McMonagle, who argued at a hearing Tuesday that the case should be thrown out based on Castor's decision.

However, Castor may be helping Cosby's defense team a great deal with his claims.

On Tuesday he testified that a press release he issued in 2005 announcing he would not charge Cosby was actually a coded declaration — to press, the broader legal community, and lawyers for Cosby and Constand — which was meant as a written declaration that Cosby could never legally be charged in this case, and could not invoke the Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination in Constand's lawsuit.

His intent was to "set up the dominos to fall in such a way that Mr. Cosby would be required to testify," he said.

The lawsuit ended with an undisclosed settlement.

Montgomery County DA Kevin Steele filed criminal charges against Cosby in December after more than 50 women accused him of assault, and newly unsealed documents from Constand's lawsuit included Cosby admitting to drugging and touching her.

But Castor testified that using Cosby's testimony in the criminal case violated his constitutional rights and the terms of Castor's agreement with Cosby's former lawyer Wally Phillips, who is now deceased.

Prosecutors were befuddled by Castor's defense of his claims that his 2005 press release on the case constituted a legally binding agreement, but the harshest questioning came at the end of the hearing from Judge Steven T. O'Neill.

"We have an immunity statute. … Why did you not make it in writing? Why did you not do that? Do you know why you didn't do that?" O'Neill asked Castor about the agreement that Cosby could not be prosecuted.

Castor said he did not feel any further record of his decision was needed.

"A prosecutor is the minister of justice," he said. "I thought that meant I was supposed to seek justice."

Constand waited a year to report being drugged and digitally penetrated by Cosby in his Cheltenham Township mansion in 2004, gave inconsistent versions of events to law enforcement and had multiple contacts with Cosby after the assault, he said.

> "I was hopeful that I had made Ms. Constand a millionaire."
> Castor

"She had ruined her own credibility," he said.

Despite that, Castor was convinced of Cosby's guilt.

"I had already decided that I wanted Mr. Cosby punished in civil court," he said.

Testimony on this issue is scheduled to continue in Montgomery County Court on Wednesday.

Virginia prosecutor says teen stabbed in case linked to students

The mother of a 13-year-old girl whose abduction and fatal stabbing have been tied to two Virginia Tech students cried on Tuesday as she recalled her daughter's battle against multiple childhood illnesses and love of dance, music and pandas.

Tammy Weeks shed no new light on how the first-year engineering students charged in daughter Nicole Lovell's death might have met the teen who lived near the university campus in Blacksburg, Virginia.

Instead, Weeks spoke of a girl who survived a liver transplant and non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and dreamed of being on the television show "American Idol."

"Nicole was a very lovable person," Weeks told reporters at a news conference in Blacksburg, before hurrying away in tears.

Preliminary autopsy results indicate Lovell was stabbed to death, Montgomery County prosecutor Mary Pettitt said. Authorities believe Lovell died on or about Jan. 27, the same day she went missing.

After a four-day search, her remains were found about 90 miles away in a heavily wooded, rural area in North Carolina, officials said.

David Eisenhauer, 18, a member of Virginia Tech's cross country team, is charged with first-degree murder and abduction and faces a possible life sentence if convicted.

A fellow student, Natalie Keepers, 19, who was accused of helping to dispose of Lovell's body, will now face a charge of being an accessory before the fact of a first-degree murder, Pettitt said.

The Zika virus has been reported in more than 30 countries and linked to microcephaly, in which babies have abnormally small heads and improperly developed brains GETTY IMAGES

Transmission of Zika virus through sex

Dallas County Health and Human Services said it received confirmation of the case in Dallas from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

The first known case of Zika virus transmission in the United States was reported in Texas on Tuesday by local health officials, who said it likely was contracted through sex and not a mosquito bite, a day after the World Health Organization declared an international public health emergency.

The virus, linked to severe birth defects in thousands of babies in Brazil, is spreading rapidly in the Americas, and WHO officials on Tuesday expressed concern that it could hit Africa and Asia as well. Zika had been thought to be spread by the bite of mosquitoes of the Aedes genus, so sexual contact as a mode of transmission would be a potentially alarming development.

The county department said on Twitter that the person was infected through sexual contact with someone who had traveled to Venezuela. The person infected did not travel to the South American country, county health officials said.

The Texas Department of State Health Services was slightly more cautious in its assessment, saying in a statement, "Case details are being evaluated, but the possibility of sexual transmission from an infected person to a non-infected person is likely in this case."

County authorities said there were no reports of the virus being locally transmitted by mosquitoes in the Texas county.

A CDC spokesman confirmed the results of a test for Zika infection but said local officials investigated the mode of transmission.

Previously, international health officials had noted one case of possible person-to-person sexual transmission. But the Pan American Health Organization said more evidence was needed to confirm sexual contact as a means of Zika transmission. The medical literature also has one case in which the virus was detected in semen.

The virus has been linked to microcephaly, in which babies have abnormally small heads and improperly developed brains.

The WHO has said the virus could infect 4 million people in the Americas. It said on Tuesday it launched a global response unit to fight the mosquito-borne virus.

Jet-setting strategy questioned after Trump's defeat

Trump noted in his concession speech that some had argued he would never do well in the state. GETTY IMAGES

Trump generated much enthusiasm for his anti-establishment message, but in the end he was out muscled by Cruz's more traditional ground game and saw some late-deciding voters side with Rubio.

Republican Donald Trump's surprise defeat in Iowa at the hands of Sen. Ted Cruz reflected shortcomings in his get-out-the-vote operations and an over reliance on his celebrity status in a state where voters prefer the personal touch.

All signs had pointed to a Trump victory in the first nominating contest in the race for the White House, with the Des Moines Register's influential poll giving Trump the lead over the weekend before Iowans went to caucus on Monday.

The loss, while not by a large margin, raised questions about Trump's ability to perform as well in voting contests as he does in polls. Prior to Monday, Trump had repeatedly boasted that he would easily win Iowa, and he has been the front-runner in most national polls since last summer.

Sensing victory, Trump had mocked Cruz's ground game in the hours before voters went to their caucus sites.

"I hear they all have these great ground games, they've got people pouring in on buses and trucks," Trump said at a campaign rally. "They are spending all the money they have from special interests. For our country, I want the person who is going to spend the least amount and get the best results."

Trump had relied on what Iowa Republican Party Chairman Jeff Kaufmann told Reuters was a "stealth" ground effort. For some though, the specifics of Trump's plan for turning out his supporters on Monday were questionable.

Instead of aggressively trying to convert any and all Republicans to his cause as Cruz did, Trump relied mostly on signing up supporters from among those who attended his rallies.

The challenge Trump faced was trying to persuade these people, many of whom had never participated in a caucus before, to show up.

Tana Goertz, Trump's Iowa campaign chair, was frequently an introductory speaker at Trump events and would encourage attendees to make sure they knew where to go to caucus. Leaflets were passed out reassuring voters that the ballot is secret and, "most caucuses take less than 1 hour."

"It's new to a lot of these people who were supporting him," said David McNeer, of Newton, Iowa, who steered his precinct into overwhelmingly voting for Trump.

Trump's bombastic style and flair for the dramatic may in the end have not helped as much as he would have hoped.

As Cruz and Rubio went the more traditional route of talking to small groups of people at pizza parlors and hotel conference rooms, Trump would make a dramatic entrance in his private jet, emblazoned with his name, and tear into his rivals at rallies attended by thousands. REUTERS

"It may be at the end that some of them didn't come out like they thought were going to come out."

Virtual tie raises doubts: Can Hillary Clinton close the deal?

Next up is New Hampshire, Sanders has been leading in opinion polls there and has an advantage because it neighbors his home state. A Clinton loss would start to set off alarm bells with her supporters.

Hillary Clinton's struggle in Iowa to fend off underdog Bernie Sanders, a self-described democratic socialist, reignited questions about her ability to close the deal with Democratic voters and turned up the pressure on her high-profile White House campaign.

The Democratic presidential front-runner, whose campaign ran off the rails in Iowa in 2008 against Barack Obama, was dealt another setback on Monday in the Midwestern state that begins the 2016 race for the presidency.

The former secretary of state, Clinton, 68, was pushed to a virtual tie with Sanders, a 74-year-old U.S. senator from Vermont.

"She has had every possible structural and organizational advantage and Sanders fought her to a draw," said Dan Schnur, director of the Jesse M. Unruh Institute of Politics at the University of Southern California.

Clinton insisted at her post-caucus rally that she was the candidate who could unify her party and prevail against a Republican challenger in the Nov. 8 election, but the sense of disappointment was palpable.

"This is almost a moment by moment rerun of 2008 ... The difference is her competition is not as tough this time."

Schnur

With no clear victory to announce, Clinton's campaign scrapped a plan to have her daughter Chelsea and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, introduce her. They stood alongside her instead, with Bill Clinton wearing his campaign logo badge upside-down.

Aides removed the teleprompter at the last minute, supporters at the Drake University rally told Reuters, in a further indication of last-minute changes in plans.

While the race in Iowa had tightened in recent weeks, her aides had appeared to draw some confidence from a Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics poll over the weekend that showed Clinton with a 3 percentage-point lead over Sanders among likely caucusgoers.

Into the early hours of Tuesday morning, Clinton and Sanders remained separated by less than a single percentage point. The race was so tight that several precincts were forced to decide whether Clinton or Sanders got the winning votes — and one more delegate — by a coin toss, following the state Democratic Party's advice. Top US generals: Women should have to register for draft

The top U.S. Marine Corps and Army generals said on Tuesday that women should be required to register for the military draft, along with men, as the armed forces move toward integrating them fully into combat positions.

"I think that all eligible and qualified men and women should register for the draft," Gen. Robert Neller, the commandant of the Marine Corps, told a Senate Armed Services Committee hearing on women in combat.

Gen. Mark Milley, the Army chief of staff, also backed registration for women, although two other witnesses, Navy Secretary Ray Mabus and Acting Army Secretary Patrick Murphy, said only that there should be a discussion of legislation requiring women to register for the Selective Service.

The Uncle Sam "I Want You" poster on display at the Times Square Recruiting Station in New York. GETTY IMAGES

It was the first time Neller and Milley had publicly backed requiring women to register for the draft. They spoke in response to a question from Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Missouri, who said she also believes women should register.

The White House said the comments did not reflect a policy change. "I don't know how seriously that is being considered," press secretary Josh Earnest said.

The U.S. military has been an all-volunteer force since the 1970s, but young men must register in case the draft is reactivated.

The military leaders said it would take years for women to be fully integrated into combat units, although they generally voiced strong support for the plan to skeptical committee members. REUTERS

7 Things You Must Know Before Putting Your Home Up for Sale

Philadelphia - A new report has just been released which reveals 7 costly mistakes that most homeowners make when selling their home, and a 9 Step System that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that fully three quarters of homesellers don't get what they want for their homes and become disillusioned and - worse - financially disadvantaged when they put their homes on the market.

As this report uncovers, most homesellers make 7 deadly mistakes that cost them literally thousands of dollars. The good news is that each and every one of these mistakes is entirely preventable. In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "The 9 Step System to Get Your Home Sold Fast and For Top Dollar".

How using food scraps can save you $1,500 a year

An estimated 40 percent of what consumers buy at the grocery store goes to waste.

We all like to moan and complain about how there is not enough money in the bank at the end of the month. Well, here is a simple step that could save a family of four $1,500 a year: Stop wasting food.

It sounds flippant, but it is not. About 40 percent of the food America produces goes to waste. And it's not a minor expense: The USDA estimates that food waste amounts to around 2 million calories a year for a family of four, costing roughly $1,500, which is more than $100 a month for the family, or $375 a person annually.

"Nobody wakes up in the morning wanting to waste food, but it happens in little bits and pieces," says Dana Gunders, senior scientist at the National Resources Defense Council and author of the new book "Waste-Free Kitchen Handbook." "We are so price-sensitive in the store, but when we get home and eventually throw out a quarter of the cheese we just bought, we don't realize that's another $1.50."

Reducing food waste takes planning and discipline. Gunders gives some tips below:

Shop deliberately, from a list, for just a couple of meals ahead of time. Otherwise your eyes will be bigger than your stomach, and much of what you buy will end up in the trash.

Use up leftovers by making catch-all dishes like soups, stir-frys, fried rice, frittatas and risottos.

Stale bread? Make menus involving croutons, French toast or bread pudding.

Learn to store food properly. For instance, lettuce usually lasts longer in the crisper, while apples, mushrooms and peppers need more aeration and do better outside those drawers.

If you use your food scraps wisely, you can have a whole fridge full of meals. GETTY IMAGES

Do not get freaked out by expiration dates, Gunders advises. These are just a manufacturer's best guess about peak freshness. Use your judgment; do not throw away food just because of a number on a carton.

For more pointers on maximizing food budgets, we talked to a few high-end chefs. In the restaurant world with its razor-thin margins, if you do not use every possible scrap of food in your kitchen, you are out of business.

Fish heads: Most consumers toss them, but Marjorie Meek-Bradley, executive chef of Washington, D.C.'s Ripple, and a contestant on "Top Chef," likes to debone the head and make lettuce wraps with the meat.

Carrot tops: Along with the leafy tops of other root vegetables, says Meek-Bradley, they make the foundation of an excellent pesto sauce.

Potato scraps: Don't get rid of them, say Bruce and Eric Bromberg of Blue Ribbon Restaurants. They are ideal for making potato pancakes.

Kale stems: The natural instinct is to toss them, but they make crispy, healthy, kale fries, say the Brombergs.

Citrus juice: If you have some left over, it makes an ideal kitchen cleaner, says John Johnson of Four Seasons New York. It is biodegradable, nontoxic and degreases like nothing else.

Bones: "I always use leftover chicken or turkey bones to make soup," says Troy Guard, chef of Denver-based TAG Restaurant Group.

Tomato insides, carrot peels, mushroom stems and day-old brown rice can all can be used to make a tasty veggie burger, says Guard. REUTERS

Gwyneth Paltrow: Chris Martin is 'like my brother'

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

When Gwyneth Paltrow and Chris Martin split in 2014, they coined their own catchphrase: "consciously uncoupling." Ever since, they've been redefining what it means to be exes.

Since filing for divorce last April, they remain a huge part of each other's lives when it comes to raising their kids, Apple and Moses.

In the March issue of Glamour, the actress describes Martin like a sibling — an interesting switch from being spouses, to say the least. Paltrow says, "We're still very much a family, even though we don't have a romantic relationship. He's like my brother."

Although she confirms they're not living together, they might as well be. She explains, "He's more than welcome to be with us whenever he wants. And vice versa: I sleep in his house in Malibu a lot with the kids. We'll have a weekend all together; holidays, we're together."

We can't wait to find out their trademark slogan for this phase of the breakup.

Kim Kardashian and Amber Rose take the selfie to end all selfies

Remember last week when things got heated between Kanye West and Wiz Khalifa on Twitter? Their feud got ugly fast, despite West's #CoolPantsWiz compliment. Even Amber Rose, ex of both Wiz and Kanye, got dragged into this mess. (She then posted some NSFW tweets about her and West's sexual history…)

There may be beef between 'Ye and Wiz, but the ladies in their lives are teaming up to say they want nothing to do with it. Kim Kardashian and Amber Rose proved this when posting the selfie to end all selfies. Kardashian captioned the snapshot, "Tea anyone?" – a reference to a popular Internet meme about sipping tea and minding your own business. Another caption they could have written? "Grow up, boys."

Harry Styles is going solo

Just last week, Zayn Malik dropped his first solo track, "PillowTalk." And let's just say it was quite a change of pace from his One Direction days. (Even the perpetually stoic Simon Cowell would blush at the lyrics.) Now another boybander is going his own way. Billboard confirmed Harry Styles officially cut ties with his management team and signed a new solo contract with CAA's Jeffrey Azoff.

It's an eventful week for Styles, who celebrated his birthday on Monday (even tweeting ex-girlfriend Taylor Swift's "22" lyrics to commemorate the occasion).

J.K. Rowling, with Daniel Radcliffe, Emma Watson and Rupert Grint, is seen at the 2011 premiere of the final "Harry Potter" film. GETTY IMAGES

This past week, Harry Potter author J.K. Rowling revealed the locations of four more international wizarding schools. They are Ilvermorny in America (somewhere in New England), Mahoutokoro in Japan, Castelbruxo in Brazil and Uagadou in Africa. The announcement came from Evanna Lynch, who played Luna Lovegood, at the Celebration of Harry Potter at Universal Orlando Resort. In addition, Pottermore, the site for all things Harry Potter, tweeted out a map of the schools and even more information on them from Rowling.

Sure, this is all to help get the word out about the spinoff film "Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them," which is set in the wizarding world. (Ilvermorny will feature in the film.) But here's the thing: Rowling has remained incredibly active in the Potter fan community, keeping the magic alive for us despite the fact that both the book and film series ended years ago.

I guess this has been on my mind, both because of the death of Alan Rickman last month and the fact that they're building the Wizarding World of Harry Potter at Universal Studios Hollywood, a few miles from me. As a Potter fan, it means a lot to have that world not just stay alive, but expand. It's wonderful that Rowling takes the time to answer fan questions on Twitter, brings us new stories to fill in the gaps and solve the mysteries left over from the books, and gives us fun facts about our favorite characters. The last book may have come out in 2007 and the last film in 2011, but I bet you still tell people what house you're in. Of course you do. I bet you even have your wand on your desk right now.

Thank you, J.K. Rowling, for being so active in fandom. Thank you for keeping this alive for us. Thank you for telling us what Rickman knew about Snape. Thank you for standing your ground with the revelation about Dumbledore. Thank you for creating a whole new generation of kids who wait for the owl carrying their acceptance letter to Hogwarts, and for giving Potterheads around the world another part of this universe to love. Thank you for the magic.

The hot list

The temperature has cooled (kind of) but the social scene keeps heating up. Philly VIPs, including a couple of couples ready for Valentine's Day, tell us what's on fire this month. RACHEL VIGODA

• What other city can say they have a wing-eating competition that sells out a sports arena? I am excited to go to the one event that never disappoints: SportsRadio 94WIP's Wing Bowl! On Feb. 4, people start tailgating in the Wells Fargo Center parking lots at 4 a.m., before the wing-eating competition at 6 a.m. We know this event is crazy, but that's Philly for ya!

• With February being Black History Month, I'll take my son to soak in some history at the National Constitution Center. The Breaking Barriers exhibit sounds great. It's very interactive and you learn about the lives of those who influenced our country, like Thurgood Marshall and Jackie Robinson. Got to know where you came from to get where you're going!

• Who doesn't love a food event that supports a charity? Philly Cooks, held on Feb. 16 at the Downtown Marriott, is where the city's hottest chefs come to one place for all of us foodies to eat their restaurants' top dishes. With live music, a dessert lounge and restaurants handpicked by the editors of Philadelphia Magazine, what else do you need? I'm checking this out for the first time to stuff my face and make some great connections! Plus, it all supports The Food Trust. MyNEWPhilly.com will be there documenting the event as well.

2 Tony Bruno and Robin Austin
Hosts and producer, "The Tony Bruno Show"

Their story: Tony and Robin met seven years ago when Robin was an assistant producer on Tony's show in Los Angeles. They started dating secretly about six months later. When Tony was offered a show in Philadelphia, he asked her to move to the City of Brotherly Love and she said "yes!"

• February is usually a very busy month because of the Super Bowl — being in the sports industry, we have been covering and traveling to the Super Bowl every year since being together. This year is no different as we are in San Francisco for Super Bowl 50 week. It's one of our favorite cities (besides Philadelphia, of course).

• As much fun as Super Bowl week is, it's exhausting, so we look forward to our return — just in time for the big Valentine's "Tony Bruno Show," live on Feb. 10 at ComedySportz. The public is invited to be part of the show — it's one of our favorite shows of the year.

• We're looking forward to a romantic dinner at Cantina Laredo on Feb. 18. They do these amazing tequila tasting dinners several times a year, pairing tequila drinks with every course. We highly recommend it.

• Look for us at Noord on East Passyunk. We've become great friends with owner Joncarl Lachman and he does Robin's Dutch heritage proud!

3 Jason and Marlo Dilks
Owners, P'unk Burger and SliCE

Their story: The husband and wife duo are always on the go with eight "babies" — four restaurants and four children. They went on their first date in 2004 at DeLorenzo's in Trenton. Marlo said, "I hate pizza," and Jason said, "You haven't found the right one." They opened their first pizza shop in 2007, the day after Valentine's Day, because they wanted one last romantic day to themselves. Eight years later, the couple celebrated Valentine's Day by opening P'unk Burger on East Passyunk.

• We're celebrating Valentine's Day with our heart-shaped pizza-grams at SliCE, in partnership with Sermania Jewelry. One lucky recipient will be surprised with a silver "LOVE" necklace along with their pie. At P'unk Burger, we're blowing out the candle for the restaurant's first birthday on Feb. 12 with free cake shakes from 5 to 7 p.m.

• We'll call in the babysitter to celebrate on our own when we sneak out for a romantic dinner at our favorite restaurant, Vernick. (Marlo loves the Island Creek oysters and Jason can't get enough of the whole fish with fennel and orange.)

• For a family date this month, we're heading to Fabric Row to our favorite lunch spot, Famous 4th Street Delicatessen, plus we'll try the just-opened Hungry Pigeon for its Sunday brunch.

Season 2 of "Dinner at Tiffani's" premieres tonight at 8 p.m. on the Cooking Channel. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

We're about to get a major dose of nostalgia on an upcoming episode of Tiffani Thiessen's cooking show, "Dinner at Tiffani's." The second season premieres tonight at 8 p.m. on the Cooking Channel.

"I can promise you some really fun people are reappearing on the show and a lot of new guests as well," Thiessen says. "Probably the most anticipated guest is my old co-star from 'Saved by the Bell' Mark-Paul Gosselaar, along with his beautiful wife. We have a great episode of double-dating with my husband. I do a lobster boil, which was super fun."

Gosselaar isn't the only co-star she keeps in touch with. Last season, Elizabeth Berkley (Jessie Spano) and Mario Lopez (A.C. Slater) swung by, too. That's the whole premise of her show — Thiessen invites pals over for dinner parties.

Her dream dinner party

When asked who she'd invite to her dream dinner party, she goes for a combo of classy and comedy. "I think it would be amazing to have the president and the first lady over, cooking for them. I'd probably be pretty nervous," she admits. Besides the Obamas, she would pick Jimmy Fallon, who she dubs "the ultimate party guest."

The key to a good burger

The season premiere — featuring Eric Close, Matthew Lillard and Thiessen's husband, Brady Smith — is all about burgers and beer.

When asked the key to a good hamburger, Thiessen tells us the key is "not overdoing your meat."

As for her favorite thing to cook, Thiessen can't decide. "I think you've just asked the impossible question," she says with a laugh. "I like to cook everything and I am always up for a challenge."

But she does share one of her fave recipes with us. The star compares her honey-ginger chicken wings to potato chips — you can't eat just one!

Tiffani Thiessen's Honey-Ginger Chicken Wings

Yield: 4 to 6 servings

Ingredients:
- 1/2 cup honey
- 1/4 cup lime juice plus 1 tablespoon grated lime zest
- 1/4 cup tamari or soy sauce
- 3 tablespoons sesame oil
- 2 tablespoons fresh ginger
- 3 cloves garlic, minced
- 2 scallions, thinly sliced (about 3 tablespoons)
- Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper
- 16 chicken wings, tips removed, drumettes and flats separated

Directions:

1. In a medium bowl, whisk together the honey, lime juice and zest, tamari, sesame oil, ginger, garlic, scallions, salt and pepper. Reserve 3/4 cup of the marinade for later use.

2. Pour the remaining marinade into a 2-gallon zip-top bag. Add the chicken and seal the bag. Massage to distribute the marinade. Marinate, refrigerated, for at least six hours, preferably overnight.

3. Remove the chicken wings from the refrigerator and let sit for 30 minutes. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees. Line a baking sheet with parchment paper.

4. Put the wings skin-side down on the baking sheet and spoon the marinade from the bag over the wings. Cook for 20 minutes, then flip. Baste with the pan drippings, rotate the pan and cook until the honey has caramelized and the skin is a dark amber.

5. Pour the reserved 3/4 cup marinade into a small saucepan and cook until the liquid turns into a glaze. Coat the wings.

The New Feng Shui

Author and consultant Laura Benko on incorporating the ancient art into your modern home.

MONICA WEYMOUTH
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Like so many other things, feng shui didn't look so good in the '90s. During the same decade that brought us scrunchies and bucket hats, the ancient Chinese art was reduced to a design fad that too often involved cheesy waterfalls and lacquered furniture.

That's an image that Laura Benko has been working to change. After being diagnosed with a rare cancer more than a decade ago, she came across a book on feng shui, and has been preaching its benefits ever since.

"A lot of people think of feng shui as something that's about design, furniture and paint color," she says. "But it's much more than that. It's really about creating a holistic connection between yourself and your space."

Today, Benko operates a consulting service out of Brooklyn, N.Y., and her new book, "The Holistic Home," teaches readers how to use the traditional tenants of feng shui to create happy, healthy, harmonious living spaces. Here, she shares three beginner-friendly tips.

First things first: The front door

As the first thing you experience about your home, the front door — from its color to its mechanics to the pile of mail and shoes next to it — should be an aesthetically pleasing and fuss-free experience. "The front door represents opportunity, so you always want to make sure that it opens easily and that your entryway is clean, organized and well-lit," says Benko. You hear that, broken doorbell and musty old doormat? Your time is up.

Look at your life — then at your living room

As a holistic design consultant, Benko works with clients to create living spaces that serve and support their needs. What she's found is that, frequently, challenges in life manifest themselves in the home. The always-single girl? She tends to have a single vase, a lone throw pillow, a too-small bed and a packed closet that couldn't accommodate a partner's belongings. Those who have trouble sleeping may surround themselves with busy imagery, while clutter usually indicates an inability to let go of the past. "Try to see how your problems are represented in your space," says Benko. "Whatever your fears are, whatever your problems are, chances are that you'll be able to see them, and then you can take the steps to address them."

Make it personal

Before you Google image search a little feng shui inspiration, remember that it's more than an aesthetic. Just as no two lives are the same, no two applications of feng shui will look the same. "For me, the color red is very powerful and inspiring," says Benko. "But if you don't connect to the color red and you have to look at a red door every day, it won't serve you."

Sage is sage

Although it may sound like new-agey hocus pocus, burning herbs and aromatics to purify a space is a practice that spans centuries and continents. Just as you would scrub the bathroom after moving into a new apartment, Benko recommends burning a bundle of sage to refresh those things you can't see. "It's so important to do a deep cleaning of your whole space," she says. "You want to clean the grime, of course, but you also want to clear the energy."

Drexel gets a dorm for foodies

Good Food Flats is designed for aspiring restaurateurs.

ALLIE VOLPE
letters@metro.us

Step onto any college campus and you'll find rows of fraternity and sorority houses. Some universities may have honors dorms or housing dedicated to college athletes. But just off campus at Drexel University, for the first time, there will be student housing designed for the food-obsessed.

Good Food Flats, the latest student resident building from Cross Properties, pairs the learning environment of a classroom with a dorm experience through a wealth of features geared toward Drexel University's Hospitality and Sports Management program — or any other food and nutrition-minded non-Drexel students looking for an off-campus experience.

Located at 4030 Baring St., the flats are now leasing and will be open for residents late this summer, for the 2016-17 school year. With 44 fully furnished units — 175 beds available in total, with four-bedroom, two-bath shared apartments — Good Food Flats is Cross Properties' first project in University City and will cost leasers $750 a month in rent.

Jonathan Deutsch, founding director of the school's Center for Hospitality and Sports Management, had the idea for an all-inclusive housing residency targeting foodies. The flats will feature a pop-up restaurant/entrepreneur incubator and a food lab where local chefs will take part in teaching classes, urban garden spaces and a commercial kitchen, in addition to traditional amenities like study lounges, a fitness center, Wi-Fi and cable.

"Anybody in that world is going to be able to live here and have a community of like-minded individuals," says Kevin Michals, co-founder of Cross Properties.

Programming planned for the learning spaces includes cooking classes and lessons on ways to start and manage restaurants or food trucks, he says.

With Drexel's impressive lineup of restaurateur alumni and faculty like Nick Bayer, founder and CEO of Saxby's Coffee, Iron Chef Jose Garces and James Beard award winner Marc Vetri, Michals noted the school's continued dedication to the field.

"If Nick, Jose or Marc were going to Drexel," he says, "this is where they'd want to live."

Modular construction

Another unique facet of Good Food Flats' structure is in its modular construction, meaning the building will be constructed almost completely off-site in a climate-controlled environment and then assembled at the building site. A similar modular apartment complex opened in 2010 near Temple University. However, the Good Food Flats will be the first to feature college major–driven environments.

When will Phillies top prospects make an impact on MLB squad?

Here are some estimated times of arrival for the Phillies' top 10 prospects.

EVAN MACY
evan.macy@metro.us

The Phillies' farm system is vastly improved, due in part to the arrival of over a dozen prospects in seven trades over the last year and a half.

With talent loaded up in the minor leagues, fans are understandably curious about time frame. When will this team be good again? While it is way too early to tell, it's never too early to contemplate. Here's when we think the Phils' top 10 prospects will arrive at Citizens Bank Park for the first time.

1 J.P. Crawford, SS – ETA 2016: The organization's top prospect has had much fanfare as he's ascended through the Phils' minor league system and, according to Larry Bowa, could make the Big League squad by mid-season 2016.

2 Mark Appel, SP – ETA 2016: Acquired as part of the Ken Giles trade, Appel is a former No. 1-overall draft pick and will start the season near the top of the Triple-A rotation, just a short hop from South Philly.

3 Jake Thompson, SP – ETA 2016: Thompson could be one of the biggest low-profile steals for the Phillies, coming east from Texas in the Cole Hamels trade. He had an ERA of 1.88 in Reading last season.

J.P. Crawford hit .288 across two levels of minor league ball last year. GETTY IMAGES

4 Nick Williams, OF – ETA 2016: Williams has power and loves to hit home runs. In a recent visit to Philadelphia, the former Rangers draft pick said, "It doesn't get this cold in Texas, it's freezing, but when I walk out there I absolutely want to take BP. I can't wait to hit here."

5 Jorge Alfaro, C – ETA 2017: The Phillies will have Cameron Rupp and Carlos Ruiz for one more season, while Alfaro (who set the Colombian record for an MLB bonus at $1.3 million) gets ready to make his Big League debut.

6 Cornelius Randolph, OF – ETA 2019: There are very high hopes for Philly's 2015 first round pick, especially after he hit .302 in 53 games in the Gulf Coast League.

7 Roman Quinn, OF – ETA 2017: Quinn is a speedy outfielder who, if he didn't get hurt, might be a contender to make the bigs in spring training. He needs one more season but could be manning center field in the Bank sooner rather than later.

8 Franklyn Kilome, SP – ETA 2019: He was signed as a 17-year-old in 2013 but has become an impressive young pitcher, reaching 95 mph with his fastball.

9 Zach Eflin, SP – ETA 2017: Eflin has a killer sinker and will join Lehigh Valley's loaded staff in 2016. He could be a middle-of-the-rotation guy.

10 Vincent Velasquez, SP – ETA 2016: Many pontificators have Velasquez penciled in as the Phillies' No. 5 starter next season. He had Tommy John surgery, but prior to being injured he was a top 100 prospect with the Astros.

Also watch for:

Ben Lively, SP (ETA 2018), Nick Pivetta, SP (ETA 2019), Jimmy Cordero, RP (ETA 2018), Thomas Eshelman, SP (ETA 2019), Harold Arauz, SS (ETA 2020), Alberto Tirado, SP (ETA 2018)

Philly Union will have retooled offense in 2016

As training camp progresses, the Union are figuring out their new approach.

JEFF MCMENAMIN
@Jeff_McMenamin
sports@metro.us

As the Union continue to retool their roster before preseason starts, fans should prepare themselves for a much different look on the offensive side of the ball once play begins Saturday.

All signs point to the Union deploying a 4-3-3 formation, which typically has two forwards flanked on the left and right wings of the field and a central striker in the middle of the offensive attack.

Last season, the Union were hoping that striker Fernando Aristiguieta would emerge as the top goal-scorer on the team. The Venezuelan scored five goals in 21 total appearances with the Union.

On Monday, it was announced that Aristiguieta, who had been playing with the Union on loan from French club FC Nantes, would not be returning to Philadelphia in 2016 and instead heading to Ligue 2 outfit Red Star.

With the decisions to trade both Andrew Wenger and Cristian Maidana to the Houston Dynamo in the offseason, along with the decision to not re-sign forward Conor Casey, coach Jim Curtin is left with some roster decisions to make in order to spark some life into the struggling Union offense. As a team, they ranked last in the Eastern Conference in goals scored (42) last season and were tied for fifth-worst in the entire MLS in scoring.

"[We are] actively pursuing players," Curtin said at last Thursday's media day. "Again, every team is pursuing players. We're happy with our starting points but you always have to be looking to upgrade. It's a team that I believe can be a playoff team; that is our goal, we have to get in the playoffs."

Striker C.J. Sapong will be relied upon heavily again in 2016 for scoring. He notched nine goals in 27 games for the Union. Sebastien Le Toux will likely start at right wing, where he started last season and scored eight goals along with six assists.

The left wing position looks to be an open competition at the moment. The club acquired winger Walter Restrepo from the New York Cosmos last month, who scored three goals in 24 starts with the club last season. They could also go the route of rookie Fabian Herbers, who the club picked with the No. 6 overall pick in the 2016 MLS SuperDraft. Playing mainly midfield in college, Herbers scored 15 goals with 17 assists last season at Creighton.

It's a situation both Curtin and Sporting Director Earnie Stewart will be watching closely.

"The choices that we've made already with players that have left are based on [the system we want to play]," Stewart said. "We are going to play the system that is for the Philadelphia Union in what we expect for our players and make that very clear and make sure they understand their roles that they have. They have to adapt to that."

The Union will face the Jacksonville Armada FC of the NASL Saturday in the preseason opener (at 6 p.m. on ESPN3). GETTY IMAGES

No moral victories for Sixers

The Sixers learn a lesson from the Warriors they'll never forget.

ANDY JASNER
@AndyJasner
sports@metro.us

It's quite rare to see a home sellout crowd give its team a standing ovation after a loss.

The 76ers deserved the applause.

After a stirring 13-point comeback in the final two-and-a-half minutes against the defending champion Golden State Warriors, the Sixers fell just short when Harrison Barnes drained a 3-pointer from the corner with 0.2 seconds remaining for a three-point victory last Saturday.

The Sixers could have wilted. They didn't.

This could be called a moral victory, but the team refuses to look at the loss in that way.

The defeat dropped the Sixers to 7-41.

"We don't feel that way and I don't want our guys to feel that way," Sixers coach Brett Brown said. "It's sort of the beauty of the job that we have. You win and you lose. I kind of like that."

The Sixers are playing much better and that was evident in the loss to the ultra-talented Warriors.

Moral victory? Forget about it.

"For us to be down 24 and find a way at home to not roll over, not to be all caught up in the moment and find a way for to give something back to our fans, who were fantastic, is a great thing for our young team," Brown said. "It validates the work they have put in. It showed we have no letdown, no backdown, and I give us a lot of credit. We're obviously disappointed to not come away with a win."

Another rebuilding season in Philadelphia has to be frustrating for the fans, coaches and players. The loss to the Warriors shows that the Sixers are moving in the right direction with a key offseason on the horizon.

Jahlil Okafor continues to prove he can be a No. 1 scoring option in the NBA. GETTY IMAGES

"I think we learned a lot from this game," said sharp-shooter Robert Covington. "They're the No. 1 team in the league. They're by far one of the greatest teams in history. For us to come out and play the way we did, it shows none of that really matters. We have to just go out and play who's on our schedule. We have to come out focused whether we're playing the Warriors or a team that's struggling. It doesn't matter. I was proud of how we played and rallied to the end. The loss stings the same, though, and the coaches want us to feel it. All of this will help in the future."

Point guard Ish Smith tied the game briefly until Barnes' dagger in front of the Sixers bench.

Being part of a group which sticks together is something special. Sure, the loss hurts — all of them do — but they scratched and clawed with the defending champions to the buzzer.

"I agree that there are no moral victories," Smith said. "When you make a comeback like that, you want to take it all the way. We fell just a little bit short. I'm proud of all of us who stuck through it. We need to find a way to go to that next level to take the win."

Aries Choose to participate. Stay active and pursue your goals. A challenge will get you moving in the right direction. Offer your experience and knowledge in order to get ahead.

Taurus Do the groundwork and get your plans up and running. If you invest in yourself and the skills you have mastered, recognition and valuable connections will follow. Love is featured.

Gemini Be disciplined when it comes to completing unfinished business. A partnership will need tweaking. Learn from your mistakes, especially where relationships are concerned.

Cancer Keep an open mind and a closed mouth. It's to your advantage not to let others know what you are up to until you have a well-thought-out plan ready to be launched.

Leo A change will do you good. A short trip or visit to a place that offers knowledge or provides the motivation you require to get things done will lead to greater success.

Virgo Watch the actions of others, and choose your words carefully to avoid being caught in the middle of someone else's dilemma or fight. Invest your time in things you want to do.

Libra You will be rewarded if you take care of your responsibilities and the needs of elders or youngsters. Stop procrastinating and start implementing the changes you've been considering.

Scorpio You will get back what you give out. Help someone in a unique fashion in order to find a new way to use your skills. A service you provide will lead to prosperity.

Sagittarius Problems will escalate quickly if you evade issues or the truth about your feelings. Face the music so that you can move on without regret.

Capricorn If you open up about your plans, someone will offer a unique perspective that will help you add necessary final touches. Enjoy the limelight.

Aquarius A last-minute change will turn out to be beneficial. An interview or proposal will lead to a better position and standard of living.

Pisces Focus on the positive in order to make a difference. Anxiety will lead to a bad decision. A practical approach will bring good results. Be articulate when asking for favors. EUGENIA LAST
